USPA News - Six people were injured, including at least two who suffered life-threatening injuries, when a gunman or gunmen opened fire on a street in San Francisco overnight, police said. The motive for the shooting was not yet known and no arrests were immediately made.

The incident happened at around 12:46 a.m. local time on Wednesday when police were called to a shooting on a sidewalk near the intersection of Mission and 13 Streets, located in the city's Mission District. Officers responding to the report found four gunshot victims at the scene. Sgt. Monica MacDonald, a spokeswoman for the San Francisco Police Department, said the four victims were rushed to San Francisco General Hospital (SFGH), where at least two were reported to have suffered life-threatening injuries. A fifth victim went to SFGH himself while a sixth victim was taken by friends to a hospital outside the city. "This is an active investigation. Anyone with information is asked to contact San Francisco police," MacDonald said.
